If a veterinarian diagnoses rabies in an animal quarantined, then the animal shall be humanely destroyed and the head of such animal sent to a laboratory for pathological examination and confirmation of the diagnosis. If the suspected animal is so vicious and/or wild that it cannot be captured and the Police Officer or Animal Control Officer reasonably believes that capture is unlikely, the animal may be killed by a Police Officer with gunshot. When dead, the animal's head is to be severed from its body, and the head sent to the state laboratory for examination.
